Impact of different sedation modalities on post-endoscopic sedation success and adverse events. This prospective study was conducted to determine the influence of intravenous sedation, administered either alone or combined with intranasal sedation, on the success of post-endoscopic sedation (PES) and the occurrence of adverse events (AEs). During a 30-month period, a total of 1275 endoscopies was performed for the first time in 762 patients in our endoscopy unit. Before the procedure, 532 patients underwent either intravenous (IV) sedation alone or IV sedation combined with intranasal (IN) sedation. A total of 125 patients (35 IV alone, 90 IV and IN) failed the PES. No significant difference was found in the risk of PES failure between the two sedation protocols. All AEs were observed in patients undergoing PES. The incidence of anesthetist-related AEs was 4.5% when IN sedation was not used and 1.2% when IN sedation was used. When IN sedation was administered, the incidence of patient-related AEs was 16.7% when the anesthetist was not present and 18.7% when the anesthetist was present. When IN sedation was not used, gastrointestinal tract-related AEs were most frequent (10.2%), followed by respiratory tract-related AEs (2.0%). When IN sedation was used, the incidence of respiratory tract-related AEs increased to 11.1%, while the incidence of gastrointestinal tract-related AEs decreased to 6.7%. IN sedation significantly reduced the incidence of respiratory tract-related AEs. The use of IN sedation in combination with IV sedation was not associated with an increase in the risk of PES failure or an increase in the incidence of patient-related or anesthetist-related AEs.

FRISCO, Texas – These days, the Dallas Cowboys are not known for a bounty of talent at tight end. There is just not a lot of depth there, as Adam Scheier pointed out earlier in the week in his ‘Calvin Johnson is the best tight end in the NFL’ series. So when Cowboys tight end Gavin Escobar suffered an ankle injury in the first week of organized team activities, the natural reaction would be to call up a tight end off the street just to fill the roster spot.

What's New in the Photoshop EXpress?

Linkbar Wednesday, July 16, 2011 High School reunion and 60 other bloggers were given a tour of the Kenosha Historical Museum. The museum houses a fabulous collection of art, pottery, furniture, local historical artifacts and photographs. The museum was incredible and with all of the great people I met, it made me realize how much I missed my old friends. Looking around, I got to thinking about all of the people that I haven't reconnected with since high school. I was horrified at how much I have missed being connected with these people. Luckily, my mom wrote a few of us e-mails and we can get together this fall to catch up on how our lives have turned out, how many children we have, and of course, how all of our bodies have changed over the years. I miss all of my high school friends so much it breaks my heart. I think of all of the weekends I would have spent hanging out with my friends at each other's house playing video games and watching movies. Getting together was one of our greatest pleasures as we would do it once a month, almost every month. These were my best friends and there were a lot of great times together. I'm super excited to see all of the people I grew up with over the years. In fact, I may even get to meet some of the people that I have never met! I look forward to it as I think that will be the best part of the reunion! The museum is worth visiting. I just want to grab a few people that I haven't seen in years and reconnect with them again. I have been considering putting together a reunion for my friends. I can understand why some people don't want to do it though. I don't think it's for everyone and once you get past your first reunion, you don't seem to want to go again. I really look forward to finally seeing everyone that I grew up with. I miss being able to sit around at each other's houses and play games and watch movies together. I think that if this reunion was held once a year, it would be a lot better. I can't even begin to imagine being there every year and not having the opportunity to go see my friends. There would be no time to catch up with them in person. I have the best memories of high school and I truly miss all of the people that I was surrounded with for those years. I would like to
