What is the safest way to login against Facebook without giving Facebook control over the app? I have seen a lot of people using FB.login(), but in my opinion it's very insecure, it allows anyone to login against your App and have access to your Facebook account. What I would like to do is: User arrives at my app - FB dialog opens User enters his/her login/pwd They get redirected to my app to keep the secure connection I am not trying to do any Facebook sharing between my app and user, just want to login against my app. A: The key to making this secure is the secret key that you send to the server. If you use this secret key, it can only be read by your server/client and Facebook/Facebook can't see what key you are using. The key is generated using the secret key provided in the latest version of the Facebook API. This is found in the documentation located here: You send this key to the server as a parameter when making your call to FB.login. For example: FB.login(function (response) { if (response.authResponse) { // logged in and connected user } else { // not logged in } }, {scope: 'email,publish_stream,user_likes'}); Source: Xinhua| 2018-03-21 21:03:26|Editor: pengying Video Player Close by Xinhua Writer Li Xinmin BEIJING, March 21 (Xinhua) -- China's defense budget will grow nearly 10
